Organisations are made up of individuals, working in different ways. They have different strengths and limitations, motivational requirements and like to be managed differently. Employee turnover has increased by 25% in the last 5 years. Within small businesses this can cost companies as much as 40% of their annual profits with the cost of replacing a top level executive/manager being equivalent to 18 months of their salary.

This workshop looks at ways to recruit the right people into your company in the first place and looks at how to develop them to their full potential when they are working with you to effectively reduce employee turnover and improve profitability. This workshop is suitable for industry, NHS and university professionals.

Robin Hills works in the area of leadership management specifically for people working in the biotechnology or life sciences industries and has wide experience of working with issues faced in this unique and highly specialised field. Come along for a taster session on addressing the issues in recruiting and retaining professionals from your field.

Cost including breakfast: Free
